NEWBERRY A HALE FELLOW

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—Disregard of senatorial ethics and precedents apparently mean no more to Truman H. Newberry, junior Senator from Michigan, than a fund of $176,000 for his primary contest did to his brother and his other more mysterious backers.

The opening day of the regular session of the 66th Congress demonstrated that outwardly, at least, Senator Newberry regarded his indictment by a federal grand jury on the charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy as something of a joke. Some of his Republican colleagues apparently hold the same view as they thronged around the man who was, so he says, ignorant as well as oblivious of the admitted fact that a fortune was spent to secure his nomination and election.

It has long been one of the traditional precedents of the United States Senate that any member indicted on the charge of committing a felonious offense should absent himself from the chamber until the latter had been settled. In recent times this was followed by J. Ralph Burton, Senator from Kansas, and John H. Mitchell, Senator from Oregon, both of whom were so indicted. The latter did appear on the Senate floor to deliver a brief sort of "swan song" in which denial figured. Burton appeared once in the Republican cloakroom in order to be able to claim mileage, two pages obligingly holding open the doors so the secretary of the Senate and clerks could see that he had made the one visit to the Senate that session necessary to the collecting of the financial perquisites.

Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts is one of the veterans of the Senate in point of continuous service, and a supposed expert in all of its usages and practices, as he constantly asserts that notice. Moreover, he is the titular leader of the Republican majority. It was thought highly probable that Senator Lodge would point out to Senator Newberry the impropriety of appearing on the Senate floor because of his indictment at Grand Rapids. Apparently he did not. Instead he greeted the Michigan man with apparent

When this was seen a number of Republican Senators who had affected not to see Mr. Newberry, immediately changed their tactics and clustered around his desk so that he held quite a levee.

All this was prior to the calling of the Senate to order by the Vice-President. In addition to Senator Lodge there was noted among the greeters of Senator Newberry, Senators Kellogg, of Minnesota, Spencer, of Missouri, Watson, of Indiana, Colt of Rhode Island, and Curtis of Kansas. As the crowd began to leave the levee Senator Newberry discovered a few Senators at nearby desks who had not joined the reception. In a spirit of comradeship he went to them, forcing a handshake, and then slipped back to his seat while the crowded galleries watched his every move. Democratic congratulations were noticeable by their absence.

Senator Newberry answered the roll call and participated in the only vote of the opening day.

The precedent that no Senator indicted for committing a felony is said to have existed for many decades, and to have been on the supposition, as one Democratic Senator expressed it: that "any member with gentlemanly instincts who was charged with personally contributing to a fraud in which he benefitted, would willingly absent himself from the chamber while the matter was pending."

It is unlikely that any Democratic Senator will call the body's attention to the violation of a traditional precedent, the affair, so far, being a case of Republican dirty linen. Later, should Senator Newberry claim his constitutional right as a Senator and refuse to stand a court trial, and also refuse to demand an investigation by his colleagues, it is like that not only Democrats but a number of Republicans, will have much to say.

Meanwhile the Republican leaders are sitting tight and swallowing hard. Newberry gone would reduce their majority to one and place them in danger of often losing some party battles. Hence there is not likely to be any scrupulousness among the Republican leaders in the Senate as to Mr. Newberry's presence as long as he is callous enough to stand it.
